Northern Paradise

Imagine over a million acres of protected, flourishing landscape that encompasses everything from Valdivian rainforests to the open, wind-kissed steppe; from glistening blue-green alpine lakes to the rugged Andes mountains.

Within this sanctuary of flora and fauna is a hut-linked trail system, world-class fly fishing, and some of the best rock climbing on the planet.

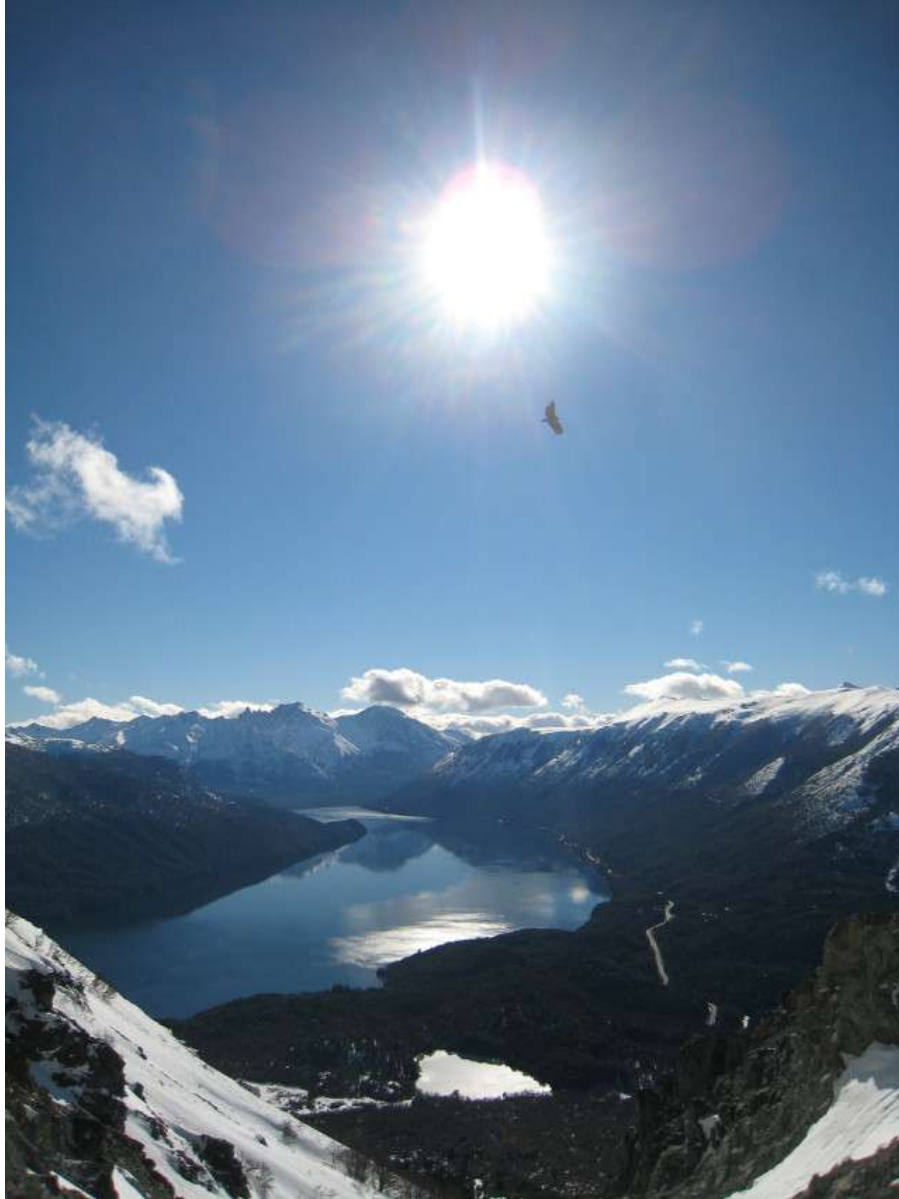

In the center of this magnificent land is the bustling city of Bariloche, Argentina. A Latin city with European flair, Bariloche offers elegant accommodations, an active nightlife and gourmet dining, all at a very favorable exchange rate for foreigners.

Welcome to Argentina's Switzerland, San Carlos de Bariloche.

Bariloche's mystique and beauty is unique. A lush, majestically gorgeous place, it is strongly reminiscent of the European Alps. Much of the architecture is log and stone, a local handcrafted specialty. The majority of its geography is occupied by a protected national forest. The thriving parks are interlaced with manicured trails leading to inviting mountain huts. Divine chocolate, flavorful beer and epicurean delights are tasty additions to Bariloche's visual allure.

As Argentina's northern gateway to Patagonia, Bariloche is considered one of the nation's vital transportation hubs for accessing world treasures like Fitzroy, the immense glaciers of San Rafael and the penguin colonies of the Valdez Peninsula. Its airport, Bariloche International, along with a state-of-the-art cross-country bus system, facilitates easy access to the southerly reaches of the planet.
