Tour Summary

Arches National Park, in Moab, Utah, is a mandatory stop on any visit to Utah's red rocks region. Featuring the world's largest and most stunning collection of rock arches, petrified dunes, sandstone fins, towering pinnacles, vertical walls, sweeping mountain vistas, balanced rocks, and miles of trails, Arches is a hiker's and photographer's mecca. The landscape here has been forged over vast stretches of time by shifting rockbed and extreme temperature changes, violent weather, relentless winds - all the powerful forces of erosion. There might not be a better place to appreciate the epic scope of time and witness Mother Nature's artistry than Arches National Park.

Introduction

Arches National Park, in Moab, Utah, is a mandatory stop on any visit to Utah's red rocks region.

Featuring the world's largest and most stunning collection of rock arches...

...petrified dunes...

...sandstone fins, vertical walls, sweeping mountain vistas...

...towering pinnacles, balanced rocks, and miles of trails, Arches is a hikers' and photographers' mecca.

The landscape has been forged over vast stretches of time by shifting rockbed and extreme temperature changes, violent weather, relentless winds - all the powerful forces of erosion.

There might not be a better place to appreciate the epic scope of time and witness Mother Nature's artistry, than Arches National Park.

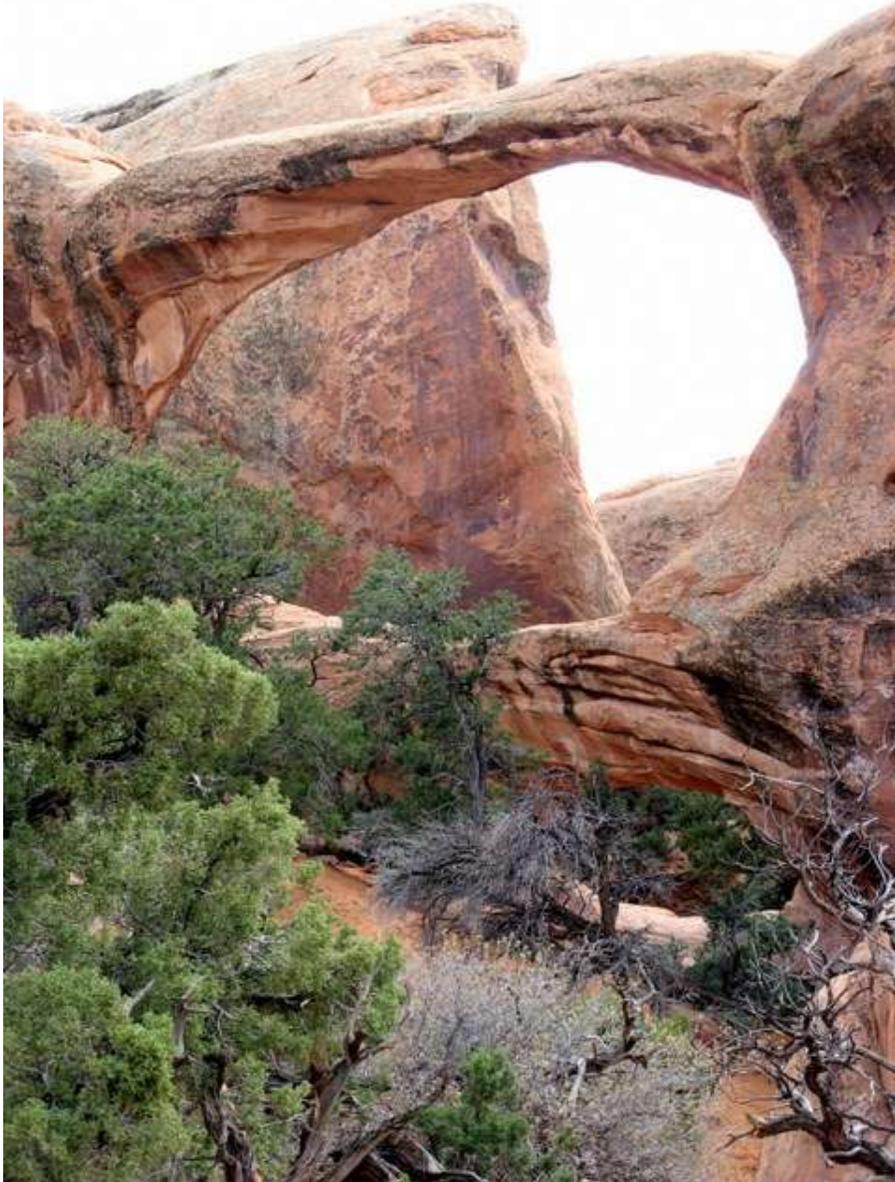

This tour offers the "up close and personal experience" that only hiking can provide. We begin with several incredible roadside sites, including Balanced Rock and Arches' famous sheer vertical walls.

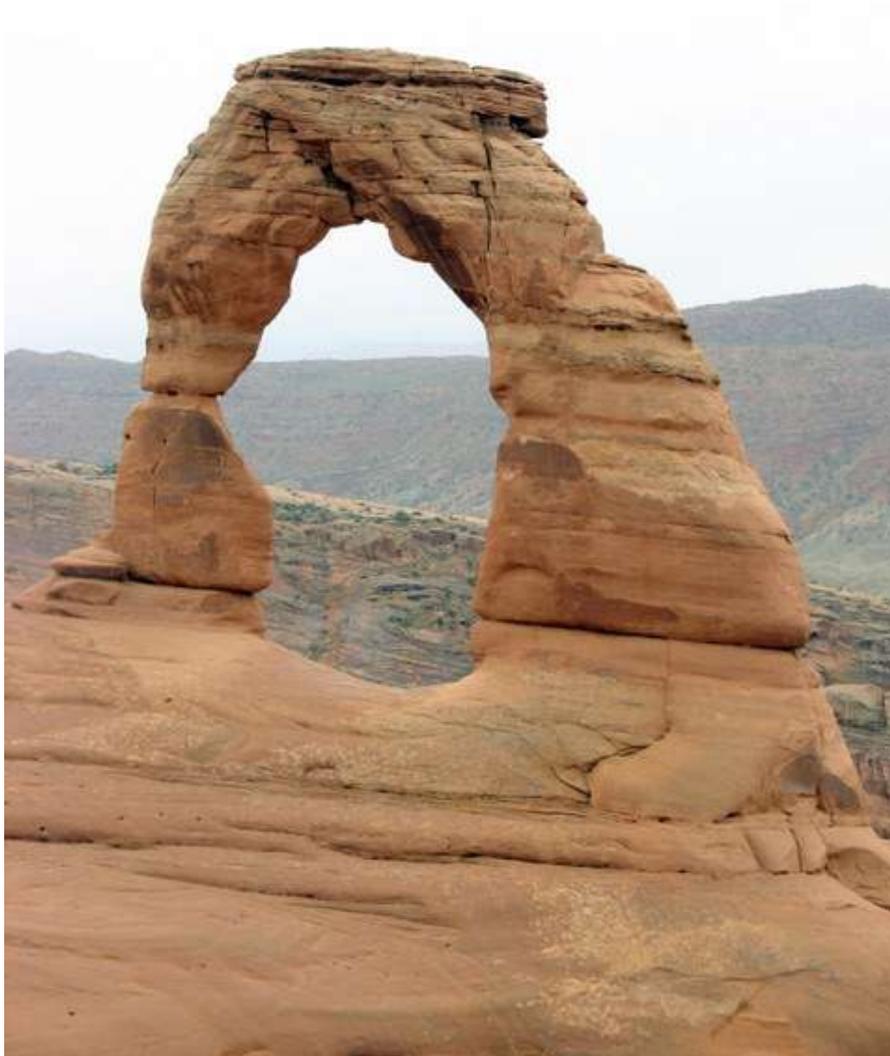

A ranger-led hike through the aptly-named Fiery Furnace rounds out the morning.

After lunch, you'll hike the Devils Garden trail, home to the world's longest arch...

as well as several other notable arches.

The tour ends with a slickrock hike to Delicate Arch for sunset photos of the most recognizable of Arches' many features.
